About PLCs

PLCs were developed to provide a means of controlling manufacturing processes through relays. For more information, see www.rockwellautomation.com.

A PLC is a computerized device that can be programmed to perform a variety of tasks. It is designed to be used in harsh environments, including dust, vibration, and temperature extremes. They accept a flow of data in the form of digital signals, storing, analyzing, and reacting to this data according to a program of instructions or algorithms stored in memory. They are used in a wide variety of applications, including manufacturing, material handling, and building automation.

Modern PLCs are often used in a variety of applications. They can be used for simple and intermediate control tasks, as well as for more complex tasks such as motion control and data acquisition.

The range of PLCs available is very large. However, the most common PLCs are the Allen-Bradley 1756 series, the Allen-Bradley 1755 series, and the Allen-Bradley 1754 series. The Allen-Bradley 1756 series is the most popular PLC in the world.

There are two main methods of programming a PLC: programming by ladder logic and programming by structured text. Ladder logic is a graphical programming language that is based on the electrical control circuit. Structured text is a high-level programming language that is based on the C programming language.

The Allen-Bradley PLCs are available in a variety of configurations, including rack-mounted and fixed-frame configurations.
