ABSTRACT

Background: Laryngeal fracture is a rare condition that can lead to significant problems with airway patency, voice production, and swallowing. Conflict in the literature exists regarding the most suitable way to manage this injury.

Case Report: We present the case of a 29-year-old Caucasian man who sustained a displaced fracture of the thyroid cartilage due to blunt trauma. He reported no swallowing, breathing, or voice problems after 1 year, and his recovery can be attributed to the early recognition and proper management of his condition.

Conclusion: This case illustrates the importance of ensuring a high level of suspicion for laryngeal fracture in the acute trauma patient. Early identification of this injury allows early intervention that not only protects the airway but also improves long-term voice and airway outcomes.

INTRODUCTION

Laryngeal fracture is a rare and potentially life-threatening traumatic injury with a reported incidence of 1 in 30,000 patients who present to the emergency department.¹⁻³ Because of the uncommon nature of this injury and low physician awareness, many laryngeal fractures go undiagnosed.²⁻⁴ Even when laryngeal fractures are diagnosed, they are often managed poorly, leading to significant problems with airway patency, voice production, and swallowing. Laryngeal trauma has an overall mortality rate of 17.9%; early diagnosis and management are essential to avoid negative implications associated with this rare injury.⁵

CASE REPORT

A 29-year-old Caucasian man was competing in a triathlon when he fell off his bike and struck his chest and anterior aspect of his neck on a metal pole. He was taken to the nearest emergency department and was noted to have multiple abrasions and some hoarseness of his voice. A laryngeal injury was suspected, so a computed tomography (CT) scan was obtained that revealed a fracture of the left lamina of the thyroid cartilage (Figure). He was taken to the operating room and underwent an open reduction and internal fixation (ORIF) of the thyroid cartilage with miniplates. He was admitted to the intensive care unit (ICU) and extubated on postoperative day 2 without the need for tracheostomy. Video stroboscopy performed 2 weeks after the event was unremarkable, and he reported no swallowing, breathing, or voice problems after 1 year.

DISCUSSION

Laryngeal fracture is an infrequent injury due to the high mobility of the larynx and the protection it receives from the surrounding bony structures of the sternum, mandible, and cervical spine.²⁻⁴ Blunt external trauma to the neck from motor vehicle accidents, sports-related trauma, assault, and strangulation is the most common cause of laryngeal fracture.³⁻⁴ Penetrating trauma is the second leading cause, often due to gunshot or stab wounds to the neck.

Common clinical features of laryngeal fracture include hoarseness, dysphagia, odynophagia, anterior
