The Effect of Community Context on Intergenerational Spanish Maintenance and English Proficiency Among Latina and Latino Children Nancy Alison Garrett, 1997 In this dissertation I investigate how community context affects Spanish language use and English proficiency among Latina and Latino children in the United States focusing on the children of immigrants I view children's language attributes through a sociological perspective that recognizes that children learn and use languages within specific social and cultural contexts and that these contexts have an important effect on language acquisition and use This theoretical perspective leads to the hypothesis that children's language skills and language use will be affected by the communities they live in I predict that living in a metropolitan area with a greater propinquity and availability of Spanish speakers will increase a child's likelihood of speaking Spanish because this will increase opportunities for using and hearing Spanish and promote Spanish within a larger United States context that often devalues languages other than English At the same time I hypothesize that community context will have little effect on children's English skills because of the ubiquitous presence of English in the daily life of any U S child I test these hypotheses using a national sample of children who live in metropolitan areas drawn from the 1990 Census I find that levels of Spanish maintenance are extremely high among children of Latina o immigrants and that a large majority of children who are born in the U S speak English fluently Multivariate analysis demonstrates that several dimensions of a metropolitan area's language context in particular the saturation and segregation of Spanish speakers have a strong effect on second generation children's likelihood of speaking Spanish that persists even after controlling for household and individual level variables Contrary to my original hypothesis I also find that the language characteristics of the metropolitan area have a significant effect on children's English proficiency This effect however is smaller than the effect of metropolitan context on Spanish use This analysis produces a better understanding of the specific elements of household and community context that affect language use The results imply that children of immigrants are following multiple paths to language adaptation and that metropolitan context is an important influence on this process of adaptation
