

Evolution & Natural Selection

DOODLE NOTES

GENETIC Evolution

natural selection changes the range of traits in a population - there are 3 ways it can change. Let's look at a moth population that shows

An example of natural selection!

COOL! A population of light brown moths lives on a tree trunk. The hawk can't see them.

YUCK! A hawk catches a light brown moth. The hawk can see them!

NOOOOOO! The light brown moths are more likely to get eaten. They are the best to survive.

Stabilizing

A higher proportion of dark brown moths survive to reproduce, passing on the beneficial trait.

Stabilizing

Stabilizing selection occurs when the average trait value is favored and selected against the extreme values. In this case, the average trait value is the most common, so they are the most likely to survive.

GENE FLOW

What is it?

Gene flow is the movement of genes in or out of a population. It can happen through migration of individuals or the movement of gametes, such as pollen or sperm. This can bring new alleles into a population or change the frequency of existing alleles.

Example:

Population 1

Population 2

Evolution by natural selection

Describe the theory of natural selection and how the theory was first conceived (thought of).

An English naturalist named Charles Darwin went on a voyage around the world. He noticed that animals in similar environments had similar characteristics. For example, in the Galápagos Islands, Darwin observed similar but non-identical species of finches on each island. He noticed that their beaks seemed to be adapted to their food source. After some time thinking and the work of other scientists, Darwin developed his theory of natural selection.

Key points:

- Individuals in a population vary in their traits.
- Some of these traits are heritable (passed on to offspring).
- Individuals with certain traits are better suited to their environment and are more likely to survive and reproduce.
- Over time, the frequency of these traits increases in the population.
