Influencing an Demand Curve: Environmental Smoking?

Environmentalists have long advocated to decrease cigarette consumption by raising a more progressive tax on a higher priced, mentholated cigarette. Raising the cigarette tax would increase the cost of cigarettes to a greater degree with a mentholated cigarette as compared to regular cigarettes. Regular cigarettes comprise the largest share of the cigarette market.

Increased supply and quantity of cigarettes increases the competition and the competition by the price paid by consumers of cigarettes is reduced. Raising the tax to encourage the shift. The increased price of a good or service raises consumer expenditure by raising revenue to the government instead of raising the price. It is raising the price for the consumers of the good or service. When taxes increase, the cost to the consumer is higher than the amount received by the producer of a good or service. The difference is the amount of the tax. The amount of the tax is the amount of the expenditure.
