

SPIRIT MEDIUM

In a world crowded with all manner of spirits, ghosts, spectres and such; whether they're restless, aggressive or pacific, most living creatures live fearing these entities. Some others, however, dedicate their lives to understand how to commune with the spirits, and even using boons granted by these creatures to complement their own abilities. These folk are known as Spirit Mediums.

The lone human warrior in ceremonial clothes walks accompanied by the spirit of a long deceased retainer who served his family faithfully.

A large half orc projects his spirit to grab the weapons of his would-be assailant.

Sitting in prayer, a female elf grows in size, assuming the physicality of a deceased veteran soldier who was suspected of murder.

Spirit Mediums are the link between the spirit world and the material world, peering into the clues the spirits leave behind. Through strenuous body and mental conditioning, they draw on the energies from the departed to finish what the spirits couldn't in life.

A LIFE OF TRAINING AND PRAYER

A Spirit Medium must train rigorously to be at peak physical conditions to endure contact with the departed. A regular day for a spirit medium starts with vigorous exercise, endurance tests such as meditating in a cold waterfall, and this exercise is followed by hours of contemplation in silence.

A medium treats a spirit with the whole respect they deserve just as they do with the living.

The spirit medium may belong to a monastery that dedicates to tending to the dead, lending their services to contact the spirits in exchange for coin. Or perhaps they may be wandering hermits who search for places with a stronger spiritual link to perform their rites and gain a better understanding of themselves.

As they grow in levels, the further their bonds with the spirits, unlocking their own potential and complementing their own abilities with the energy they receive from the spirits.

LEARNED IN THE OCCULT ARTS

Mediums are in contact with spirits from a very young age. Those who pursued training as a medium are well trained in all the aspects of the undead, most mediums don't see death as an end but rather as the natural continuation of life.

Normal folk usually fear the undead, however many creatures seek the aid of a spirit medium when they need to contact the spirit world, either to speak once again with a departed loved one or to get rid of a spirit that is haunting them.

A spirit medium spends a large portion of their training studying old cultures and their customs, studying the ecology of the creatures and ancient techniques so they grasp better knowledge regarding the departed.
