company demand Privacy's Blueprint Woodrow Hartzog,2018 Every day Internet users interact with technologies designed to undermine their privacy Social media apps surveillance technologies and the Internet of things are all built in ways that make it hard to guard personal information And the law says this is okay because it is up to users to protect themselves even when the odds are deliberately stacked against them In Privacy s Blueprint Woodrow Hartzog pushes back against this state of affairs arguing that the law should require software and hardware makers to respect privacy in the design of their products Current legal doctrine treats technology as though it were value neutral only the user decides whether it functions for good or ill But this is not so As Hartzog explains popular digital tools are designed to expose people and manipulate users into disclosing personal information Against the often self serving optimism of Silicon Valley and the inertia of tech evangelism Hartzog contends that privacy gains will come from better rules for products not users The current model of regulating use fosters exploitation Privacy s Blueprint aims to correct this by developing the theoretical underpinnings of a new kind of privacy law responsive to the way people actually perceive and use digital technologies The law can demand encryption It can prohibit malicious interfaces that deceive users and leave them vulnerable It can require safeguards against abuses of biometric surveillance It can in short make the technology itself worthy of our trust Online Privacy Protection ,2001 It is routinely acknowledged that the success of the Internet and electronic commerce depends upon the resolution of issues related to the privacy of online personal information This paper discusses some potential threats to the privacy of online personal information and efforts by businesses governments and citizens to respond to them The paper also provides an overview of the legal framework for the protection of personal information The Constitution protects the privacy of personal information in a limited number of ways and extends only to the protection of the individual against government intrusions Any limitations placed on the data processing activities of the private sector will be found not in the Constitution but in federal or state law With the exception of the Children s Online Privacy Protection Act of 1998 none of these laws specifically covers the collection of online personal information The Commission issued a report to Congress in July 1999 on Self Regulation and Online Privacy and found that the vast majority of the sites surveyed collect personal information from consumers online and that the implementation of fair information practices is not widespread The FTC issued a new report in May 2000 after another survey of web sites Notwithstanding measurable gains since the 1999 report to Congress a majority of the Commission found that self regulation alone without some legislation is unlikely to provide online consumers with the level of protection they seek and deserve and recommended that Congress consider legislation to complement self regulation Privacy's Blueprint Woodrow Hartzog,2018-04-09 Woodrow Hartzog develops the underpinning of a new kind of privacy law responsive to the way people actually perceive and use digital technologies Rather than permit exploitation it would demand encryption prohibit malicious interfaces that deceive users and leave them vulnerable and require safeguards against abuses of biometric surveillance Privacy Online Sabine Trepte,Leonard

Reinecke,2011-07-21 Communications and personal information that are posted online are usually accessible to a vast number of people Yet when personal data exist online they may be searched reproduced and mined by advertisers merchants service providers or even stalkers Many users know what may happen to their information while at the same time they act as though their data are private or intimate They expect their privacy will not be infringed while they willingly share personal information with the world via social network sites blogs and in online communities The chapters collected by Trepte and Reinecke address questions arising from this disparity that has often been referred to as the privacy paradox Works by renowned researchers from various disciplines including psychology communication sociology and information science offer new theoretical models on the functioning of online intimacy and public accessibility and propose novel ideas on the how and why of online privacy The contributing authors offer intriguing solutions for some of the most pressing issues and problems in the field of online privacy They investigate how users abandon privacy to enhance social capital and to generate different kinds of benefits They argue that trust and authenticity characterize the uses of social network sites They explore how privacy needs affect users virtual identities Ethical issues of privacy online are discussed as well as its gratifications and users concerns The contributors of this volume focus on the privacy needs and behaviors of a variety of different groups of social media users such as young adults older users and genders They also examine privacy in the context of particular online services such as social network sites mobile internet access online journalism blogs and micro blogs In sum this book offers researchers and students working on issues related to internet communication not only a thorough and up to date treatment of online privacy and the social web It also presents a glimpse of the future by exploring emergent issues concerning new technological applications and by suggesting theory based research agendas that can guide inquiry beyond the current forms of social technologies

Hundredth Window Charles Jennings, Lori Fena, 2000 Like it or not privacy has gone public As Web technology increases our privacy vulnerabilities many business leaders and experts have proclaimed the death of privacy itself Can we entrust our businesses to the Web Are our credit card numbers really safe What about other personal information from credit ratings to medical records to our Web surfing habits Security experts often say that if you put bars across ninety nine of your windows but leave the hundredth window open the invaders can still get in For computer privacy then the question becomes how can you best monitor that hundredth window Jennings and Fena provide a comprehensive guide to privacy and security in the fast changing Internet age identifying winning and losing strategies for users and businesses They argue that Web users need to think of the guarding of individual privacy as a skill in dealing with an information hungry Internet that knows more about us than we do Successful e companies will be the ones who know how to ensure a private and secure Web experience for their customers Trust is the central issue facing the world of e commerce today and THE HUNDREDTH WINDOW is the book the on line world has been waiting for

Privacy J. C. Cannon, 2004-09-21 When you are on a Web site you don't know well and you are asked to complete an online form if you are like most people you immediately weigh in your mind issues of how private the information you provide will be kept Studies have shown that 64% of consumers have left a Web site because of concerns about privacy and that online retailers lose 6.2 billion a year in sales because of privacy issues Lack of privacy conditions in building an application or a web site is a liability conversely a web site where the consumer feels that their privacy will be guarded is a competitive advantage In our security-conscious world privacy is a topic of concern right up there with identity theft and spam Yet until now there has not been one source of information for developers on how to develop applications and web sites that will take into consideration privacy concerns JC Cannon draws upon the experience he has learned from his role in the corporate privacy group at Microsoft to give developers a complete guide to including privacy in their development process It covers topics such as spam digital rights management the Platform for Privacy Preferences P3P project and protecting database data
