

WHAT IS WEARABLE AND EMBEDDED SOFTWARE?

Wearable and embedded software development refer to the creation of software that is designed specifically for wearable devices and embedded systems. These are systems that are integrated into physical devices, often with limited processing power, memory, and input/output capabilities.

Wearable software development involves creating apps that run on smartwatches, fitness trackers, virtual and augmented reality devices, and other wearable technology. The software must be optimized for the limited resources of these devices and must provide a user-friendly experience that is accessible through a small display or touch interface.
